

China-Africa Infrastructure Cooperation: Building The Groundwork For A Better Future

When speaking of China-Africa cooperation, the word “kaleidoscopic” comes to mind. Recent years have seen fruitful outcomes of the bilateral cooperation in multiple fields. Among them, infrastructure is hardly one to miss. From the plateau in the east to the coast in the west, from the landlocked countries in the sub-Saharan region to the small island states in the Western Indian Ocean, roads, railways, bridges, ports, schools, hospitals and power stations built with Chinese assistance are paving the groundwork for a better future for a land of promise and potential. “To get rich, build roads first.” This is not just a popular Chinese proverb, but an important takeaway from China’s own development. Drawing on this experience, China has spent decades working with Africa to build the transport backbone necessary for driving economic growth. Leadership News.

Yuqing: China, Nigeria Will Explore Cooperation in Digital Economy, Others

The Consul General of the People’s Republic of China in Lagos, Ms Yan Yuqing, has disclosed that China and Nigeria would jointly explore cooperation opportunities in digital economy, green economy and blue economy. Yuqing, who made this disclosure in a statement, stated that the Chinese is willing to expand imports of Nigerian agricultural products. She explained that Nigeria had called for increased partnership in Mining and Solid Mineral development and expressed willingness to partner with Chinese companies to establish manufacturing companies in Nigeria for local consumption and exports. “The two sides stand ready to create an open, transparent, fair and non-discriminatory business environment for the corporate cooperation between the two countries, strengthen the WTO-centered multilateral trading system, oppose trade protectionism, and promote trade and investment liberalization and facilitation. Both governments committed to intensifying efforts to protect the rights and dignity of each others’ citizens living in its country and create a business-friendly environment for their business”, Yuqing added. Huawei's Harmony aims to end China's Reliance on Windows, Android

Packed into a small room, a drone, bipedal robot, supermarket checkout and other devices showcase a vision of China's software future – one where an operating system developed by national champion Huawei has replaced Windows and Android. The collection is at the Harmony Ecosystem Innovation Centre in the southern city of Shenzhen, a local government-owned entity that encourages authorities, companies and hardware makers to develop software using OpenHarmony, an open-source version of the operating system Huawei launched five years ago after U.S. sanctions cut off support for Google's, opens new tab Android. While Huawei's recent strong-selling smartphone launches have been closely watched for signs of advances in China's chip supply chain, the company has also quietly built up expertise in sectors crucial to Beijing's vision of technology self-sufficiency from operating systems to in-vehicle software. President Xi Jinping last year told the Communist Party's elite politburo that China must wage a difficult battle to localise operating systems and other technology "as soon as possible" as the U.S. cracks down on exports of advanced chips and other components. 'Made in Ethiopia' Confronts Chinese Expansion in Africa

The film explores the influence of China on the continent through the story of a Chinese industrial park's expansion in a dusty farming town in Ethiopia. In Made in Ethiopia, cultures clash and forces of capitalism collide in Dukem, a small agrarian town southeast of Addis Ababa. Directors Max Duncan and Xinyan Yu take a probing look at the spreading influence of China in Africa by zeroing in on the effects on the lives of a Chinese businesswoman and two other Ethiopians caught under the crushing weight of capitalism. Filmed over a period of four years, Made in Ethiopia, which premiered this month at the Tribeca Festival and is now screening at the Encounters International Documentary Festival in South Africa, astutely blends the personal with the political. The film arrives amidst growing cinematic interest in the complicated and often controversial relationship that China shares with Africa. Other China in Africa documentaries of recent include last year's Eat Bitter (2023), Days of Cannibalism (2020) and Buddha in Africa (2019). Duncan and Yu are able to present a unique viewpoint by focusing on a trio of women, a demographic often ignored in narratives about bilateral trade. Okay Africa
