A Startup in Malawi Bets on Chinese Tech to Power an EV Shift

For years, Malawi, the world's fourth-poorest country, has suffered from chronic fuel shortages. However, in a sunbaked workshop on the outskirts of the capital, Lilongwe, a team of local electric vehicle (EV) technicians is working to overcome this anomaly. Huddled around a disassembled electric motorcycle and utilizing Chinese EV technology, the Sanguo Ventures (SGV) team carefully fits a lithium battery into the chassis, one of several such bikes being assembled here each month.
