Ghana at loggerheads with China over rampant illegal gold mining

China and Ghana, Africa's largest gold producer, are embroiled in a diplomatic row over the rampant problem of illegal gold mining, known as "galamsey". As global gold prices soar, a growing number of Chinese firms are investing billions of dollars in Ghana's lucrative gold sector. However, the alleged involvement of Chinese nationals in illicit mining operations has ignited major debate. It has prompted the Chinese ambassador to Ghana, Tong Defa, to push back against accusations that Chinese nationals are solely to blame for the illegal mining activity. South China Morning Post.

China's tariff-free trade pact for African countries brings development opportunity, says Ghanaian analyst

China's recent decision to expand its preferential trade policy, granting zero-tariff access to a total of 53 African countries, has huge positive significance for both global trade and China-Africa trade, a Ghanaian analyst has said. "This is a defining moment for Africa and a shining example of what it means to stick to the principles of globalization and free trade, which we are advocating for," Paul Frimpong, executive director of the Africa-China Center for Policy and Advisory (ACCPA), a Ghana-based think tank, told Xinhua recently in an exclusive interview.
